AusAID first: Annual Review of Development Effectiveness 2007

Description

Tweet

The inaugural Annual Review of Development Effectiveness, produced by the Office of Development Effectiveness, was tabled in Parliament on 20 March 2008.

The review is a key element in efforts to strengthen the effectiveness of the aid program as the aid budget is scaled up to reach 0.5% of Gross National Income by 2015. The review provides an annual health check of the program and identifies areas where effectiveness could be strengthened.

The review found that Australia manages its aid activities well and is achieving good results. More than three quarters of activities will meet their objectives in 2006-07, these objectives range from better budgeting to stronger service delivery.

The report found that Australian aid is increasingly consistent with partner government policies and aligned with the efforts of other donors.

The report also found that one of the biggest challenges facing Australiaâ??s aid program is its engagement with fragile states. Australia directs around half of the aid programâ??s bilateral funding to fragile states where limited improvements in health, education and youth employment suggest the need for more innovative approaches to these problems.

The review identified five opportunities to strengthen aid effectiveness:

- broadening the ways Australia engages in fragile states
- supporting reform in the larger economies of Asia
- strengthening performance orientation
- getting the most from technical assistance
- meeting gender equality commitments.
